Jaeger was forty-seven years old and a German. He had a saloon at Tenth street and Avenue A. What time he had to spare from his business he spent with Der See Rauber Fishing Club. There are about fifteen hearty clitzens of German origin in the Club, most of whom are saloonists and old sports, although the Secreatry, George Messman, is in the whalebone business.

Once every two weeks the Club chartered a tug and went down the bay. The favorite fishing ground was on Romer Shoal, off the monument, near Sandy Hook Point, Jaeger was on hand at all these functions. He had buried two wives, had no children, was on bad terms with his only brother in Brooklyn, and the Sea Robbers were family enough for him.

THE LATE PHILIP JAZGER.

Jaeger was a curious sort of fellow good-natured, but with a stock of cranky notions. About three years ago he wholesale liquor hiskey, some of them fearing they ould be driven out of the business. For years they had supplied whiskey to the retailers, particularly of the smaller class. The relations between wholesaler and retailer were of the most cordial nature until about the time stated, when the wholesale men gradually felt the trade slipping from them. At first they could not understand the change, until one day a certain retailer entered the offices of Peter McQuade, a well-known wholesale man and one of the officers of his organization.

"I am sorry," the retailer began. "I the boys have a rattling time over me."

As Gell is going to be cremated himself and rather fancies the ocean as a cheetery, he gave his promise without cannot, pay you. Nor will I be able to do so for a long time."

the Hollywood Company or close up my place."

As a wholesale dealer, Mr. McQuade had heard of the Hollywood whiskey, but had never regarded it in a serious light. He knew that the corporation has struggled on for years, but the brand was not handled by the wholesale men. He asked many questions of the retailer, and elicited the information that the ward man in one particular precinct named had told him he would have to buy the Hollywood whiskey, or close up after hours and on Sunday. The retailer did more business on Sunday than any other day of the week.

McQuade called a meeting of the officers of his society and the facts were laid before them. It was decided to see as many of the retailers as possible and ascertain how far the threats had extended. The result satisfied them as to why the trade had fallen off. Then a careful investigation was made, and as a result they concluded that Inspector Williams as well as other officials in the Hollywood Company, and that the orders to the retailers had come from that source. nome over his saloon at 28 Division street.

A few days ago Gell called a meeting of the Club, and it was decided to hold the obsequies July 5, which is next Thursday. A limited number of invitations were sent out—not more than two dozen in all.

The party will assemble at Clifton S. I., at 9 o'clock in the morning. A tug will be in waiting, and from that point the picturesque passing of Jaeger will begin. There will be lunch, and whenever the sad sea waves fail of a proper requiem suitable music will be offered by the mourners in the old German drinking songs the dead man loved and sang.

offered by the mourners in the old German drinking songs the dead man loved and sang.

A reporter for "The Evening World" called upon Mr. Gell this morning and saw what there is left of Jaeger. At Gell's command a waiter hustled the dishes off the dumbwaiter and brought down by that useful avenue the remains of poor Jaeger. All that is left of a once robust man is four pounds of white bone dust that barely fills a blackpainted quart canister. Gell says that he is going to cut off the top of the can put a glass in it and let the curious see it after Monday next. He says that he dare not leave the box open to the public, as every other fellow wants to have a pinch of the ashes, and there would be left nothing for a funeral if the can were not guarded.

Although it is not part of the constitution and by-laws of the See Rauber Fishing Club to have an eccentric funeral, Gell says that he will be cremated, and that another member, now flouritshing in good health, has already made a will providing for the scattering of his cinders from the summit of Liberty. ders to the retailers had come from that ourse.

The wholesale dealers thought themselves a big power in the city and that they would have little difficulty in fighting the police. Every influence possible was brought to bear on the powers that be to aid them. But the threats and coercion went on, and soon the wholesale men were left almost without a customer of any kind.

If public opinion could be brought to bear upon the case it was thought the police officials would retire from the field, so a newspaper man named Smith was informed of the facts. He knew he had a great story. It would be one of held, so a newspaper man named Smith was informed of the facts. He knew he had a great story. It would be one of the sensations of the day, he figured out, and when the wholesale men offered to pay him well for his services he refused. "Any paper in New York." he said, "will jump at that story and will pay well for it. I do not want your money." The reporter went to work on his "sensation." The names of half a dozen retailers who were friendly to the wholesale men were given to him. They all made affidavits to the effect that they had been coerced by the police into buying Hollywood whiskey.

After writing his story, and with the affidavits as proof. Smith started out to sell it to the first paper he thought of for a thousand dollars or so. He showed it to the city editor, who told him it was a great story, indeed He was asked to call again next day and hear what the managing editor had to say. When he called again the manuscript was returned to him.

"The story is not in our line," he was told.

An important statement worth investigation, was made by a Committeeman. He said dead animals and old bones were collected on Riker's Island and kept piled up there for days and then sold for $1$ a barrel. That, if true, is not only a danger to health, but a violation of the law by which somebody is profiting pecuniarily.

The authorities of College Point, Flushing, Astoria and Sands Point, have decided to take radical steps to see if something cannot be done to stop the dumping of city garbage off Riker's Island. The Board of Health has been notified that some action will be taken, and the Health Commissioners have decided to look more fully into the matter. Sanitary Superintendent Roberts and Chemist Martin yesterday made a special trip of investigation to Riker's Island. What their decision in the matter is, has not yet been reported.

Mayor Pauly, of College Point, will be the leader of those who believe the dumping is a nuisance. He threatens to secure an indictment against Commissioner Andrews under the Three Counties act, which covers Kings, Queens and New York counties. It is said that the condition of Riker's Island at present, with the foul odors that arise from the garbage, is a disgrace to civilization.
